SMILE IF YOU BUNT

Steve C. Wang, an associate professor of statistics at Swarthmore College, charted baseball managers from the 2007 season as Chernoff faces, a method of using the heights, widths and angles of facial features to represent different sets of numbers.

*Percentage of players who had the advantage of batting against an opposite-handed pitcher at the start of the game.
Note: Because different rules cause National League managers to use more pinch-hitters, for example, each manager's rates are compared with his league's average.
